

How our work has helped

Tracey helped me in being able to express my feelings more and not be ashamed of how I am feeling.

I felt listened to and this helped me come to terms with my grief. It was easy for me to get to the location in Wolverhampton, I could ride my bike or walk rather than travel to Birmingham.

Tracey helped my son with his separation anxiety he felt very comfortable with her.

We were able to get to Oldbury, much easier than driving into Birmingham. That really helped, so that my son didn't lose time from school.

I found my wellbeing session really relaxing, it helped remove a lot of tenseness. My wellbeing therapist is such a lovely person, so friendly and encouraging.

How to get support

Ways to contact us:

admin@edwardstrust.org.uk
0121 454 1705
www.edwardstrust.org.uk

We will then be in touch to get more details and discuss ways in which we can support you or signpost you to other services if more appropriate.

When to get in touch

In most cases it is beneficial for a period of at least 8 weeks after the death to have elapsed before seeking counselling, play therapy or wellbeing support from Edward's Trust. However we can offer initial telephone advice and support in the early stages of bereavement.

Why our work is unique

We recognise that all grief is an individual journey and we tailor our support to meet individual needs.

We offer an holistic approach to bereavement support - we support the physical aspects of grief too, offering wellbeing therapies and support.

We are specialised - All our therapists are qualified, experienced in bereavement support and registered with their appropriate professional body.

We recognise that providing our support in the local area means travelling time to appointments is reduced. We work from a choice of locations throughout the Black Country.
